Faking it
The phenomenon of tanning at Holy Cross
BY CLAIRE NICOLAY
CRUSADER FEATURES STAFF
As we enter the midst of the cold, harsh wintry months that make up a majority of our time here at Holy Cross, a mysterious spectacle emerges amongst the female (and even some of the male) student population. You see them walking to and fro about campus, and the weird combination of heavy snowfall and unnaturally dark skin discolorers; you may have asked yourself, did that girl (guy) just return from some vacation in the Caribbean or South Florida? No sir, these individuals were more likely in some shady dive on Shrewsbury Street; perceptually sinking in to a crucial sunlight exposure. I myself view tanning as a guilty pleasure, to be indulged in when Wooll has been cloudy, rainy, snowy and miserably cold for a number of consecutive days...
