Peterman reflects on failures to inspire business students

Dressed in his trademark denim shirt, jeans, cowboy boots, and his famous duster coat, Holy Cross graduate J. Peterman ’63 addressed the Pre-business lecture series on "The Painful but Essential Art of Failing," was a fitting way to launch the new Pre-business promotions that people could cut up on the couch with read.

Peterman advocated breaking rules in order to do things differently, and following childhood baseball, and incorporates his team management skills at his company. He feels that a team needs to be able to make mistakes and learn from them in order to be successful and happy.

PETERMAN BLOG

J. Peterman is known for his unique approach to business and his down-to-earth persona. He started with $500 and a great idea. His company, J.Peterman, was based on the concept of selling high-quality, comfortable clothing at affordable prices. He felt that this was something people could relate to, and it was successful. He called it a culture in which people could learn from their mistakes and have their creativity reawoken.

Peterman’s general outlook is difficult to be successful and happy. "If you are out to make money and do not have a passion for it, you will never make it. But if you have a passion for it, then you can make it happen," he said.

He plans to rebuild his business starting from the beginning, armed with the knowledge that he has learned from his mistakes. "I don’t think I’m ever going to have a motto like "Never Trust a Chicken," he said. "I think I’m going to have a motto like "You can’t trust anyone."

Peterman believes that the key to success is to have a good idea and be persistent in the face of failure. He has never made it to the big leagues, and he feels that this is something people should not be afraid of. He has a passion for what he does, and he feels that this is something that people should pursue.

Peterman’s message to the students is to believe in yourself and your ideas, and to never give up on your dreams. He believes that if you have a passion for what you do, you can make it happen.
