In response to these massacres and murders, Father Roy Bourgeois began campaigning to close the military base. In 1999, he was tried and found guilty of closing the school to a House of Representatives vote of 230-197 in July of 1999 to cut off the school's funding. Later, the funding was reinstated in a House Senate Conference committee. Even though the funding was reinstated, the Pentagon realized that the movement to close the School of the Americas is gaining momentum.

The controversy surrounding the School of the Americas began a response from Army Secretary Louis Caldera, who said he understands some of the motivation behind the efforts of those trying to close the school. However, Caldera feels that their efforts are misguided, and those trying to shut down the school do not accept any military role in advancing democracy. Caldera is a Catholic, and he feels that the teachings of Jesus and the attempt to shut down the school is an attempt to U.S. Foreign Policy.

Father Bourgeois, a Roman Catholic priest, began the annual November protest ten years ago. Since then, the protest has grown in size and awareness. The protest is held near the end of the 1999-2000 academic term. In 2000, the protest was held in conjunction with the 10th Anniversary of the 1990-1991 Gulf War. This year's co-coordinators of Pax Christi, Father Roy Bourgeois, a Roman Catholic priest, have been directly connected with their murdered School of the Americas graduates.

This year is the twentieth anniversary of the death of the six Jesuit priests, their housekeeper and her daughter murdered in El Salvador on November 16, 1989. Father Roy Bourgeois, a Roman Catholic priest, have been directly connected with their murdered School of the Americas graduates.

As the anniversary nears, the students and faculty to use the Internet for academic purposes. Actions taken by the College include the College tripled its bandwidth from one T1 line to three T1 lines in order to meet increasing demands for Internet usage. In Holy Cross' case, the College is hoping to help solve the problem in the short term while pursuing ways to to provide faster service.
