Tyler Dobrowski Presents His Unique Solution to the Election Controversy

I, TYLER DOBROWSKY, AM RUNNING FOR PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES OF AMERICA.

Now, I’m not sure if this is allowed, exactly. In fact, I believe there are some rules against running for president after the election, but WILL THAT STOP US??? No! (You would also think there would be rules against a dead man being elected to the Senate, but you would be wrong. And you thought Al Gore didn’t have a pulse.) Just to be fair, I called the two major candidates on the phone. I called George W. first.

I then had to call Al Gore.

AL: Oh, thanks a lot. Stupid Nader… stupid Tyler… There’s so many disenfranchised voters out there… maybe … yeah, this worked at the convention … (starts making out with the phone)

ME: Al. Stop it. You won’t get any more votes making out with Tipper… or with any other object.

Now that the two candidates know what is in store for them, the only question I have left (besides how I’m supposed to win when everyone has already voted) is who I will choose as my running-mate. My first choice, is, obviously, Natalie Portman because I’m in love with her. I actually saw her in person once. I went to a formal dance thing at Harvard, and she goes there. Remember that Saturday Night Live sketch where the two guys in a dance club grind ridiculously with random girls? That was me. Except I didn’t actually touch her, for fear that her huge bodyguard would kill me. And it only lasted two seconds. And she had no idea I was there. In fact, she probably thought it was a gust of wind or something. But it was awesome. So, Natalie Portman will be my running-mate. She will clean up some. So, Natalie Portman will be my running-mate.

In conclusion, I will fight hard for the young people of today, as well as the people of tomorrow. And, just to make sure I have enough votes, I will also make out with Tipper Gore. Thank you.

A Dream that Makes Sense, and an Explanation that Doesn’t...

"Hey Kev, a lot of people have been asking me what’s going on with the meal plan."

"Yeah, me too. Maybe we should write an article in The Crusader or something."

"Do we even really know what’s going on?"

"I don’t know… I feel like we have certainly done our part to present a feasible plan the students support, yet the people who can make it happen are unwilling to make it happen. We really shouldn’t settle for anything else if this is the plan the student body supports; also, certain students and administrators have worked too hard on this for us to give up now."

"What gets me Kev is that I feel we haven’t received an acceptable or a consistent answer on why this isn’t happening. I think the problem is that the school depends on the money left over from missed meals, somewhere around one million dollars."

"Let’s see what we’ve heard so far about this sum of money, which basically exists because the nature of the current meal plan is to rip off students: the money is used to pay for renovations made to Kimbball years ago…"

"So basically the school won’t change the meal plan because with a declining balance plan — God forbid — students will actually eat all the food they pay for."

"You know Ryan, that’s the impression I get. There is also a theory that the school overcharges for Dining Services as a component of room and board so that it can charge less for tuition. Thus, we have a better ranking in the tuition column."

"Why can’t we just slightly raise the tuition if we have to, whether or not that’s the case. This is a student initiative that has been pushed for years now. Would it be too much to ask that the school put a student initiative before the rankings of the school?"

"I think we both know it would be. Soap is the first major change in years that the school has made for the sake of the students on campus."

"Well, if we can get soap, why can’t we get a meal plan? The school is supposed to be about the students."

"I think there are some people we need to remind about that because the students deserve a change."

"Let’s make it happen…"

That’s it. I’ve had it. I am done with this whole “election” thing. The country is divided between Republics and Democrats, the Green Party has thrown a monkey wrench into the political process, and we, it seems, do not have a president elect.

I actually thought this whole mess was pretty cool for awhile: the country thrown into turmoil, every vote counting, a race so close it makes your teeth sweat. I half expected Clinton to show up down in Florida and proclaim that he will be dictator for life, just to throw some more confusion into the election. I was caught up in all of this until I heard that there is a very good possibility that instead of Al Gore or George Dubya, STROM THURMOND will become the next president. Strom Thurmond is approximately 98 years old, and, last I checked, still thought of slavery as a “necessary evil.” As a country, we can not let this man be president. So, right here, right now, I am going to deliver yet another bombshell to this already wacky election:

I, TYLER DOBROWSKY, AM RUNNING FOR PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES OF AMERICA.

That’s right, kids. Not satisfied with Al and George? My name is Tyler. Come bounce with me, bounce with me.
